KENNA, CHAVES COUNTY, NEW MEXICO, FRIDAY,

JUNE 16, 1916.

NO. 18.

BACK AND FORTH

Miller-King

On Saturday, June 10, Miss Ethel B. Miller and Mr. Frank R. King were united in marriage at the Methodist parsonage at Elida, N. M., at 6:30 p. m., Rev. Hendricks officiating.

The bride is the talented daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Miller of New Hope, and was one of Chaves county's most successful teachers, having just closed the past term at Redland, N. M.

The groom is the son of Mr. J. B. King of Thornham, N. M., and is in the employ of the Santa Fe at Amarillo.

They left Sunday morning for Amarillo, Texas, where they will make their home for the present.

The Record extends congratulations and throws the proverbial old shoe.

Will Construct

Road to Kenna

W. M. Atkinson, chairman of the county road board, advises that he has received instructions from the state engineer that a road camp will be established between the new Acme bridge and Kenna, which will construct a highway from the river to the Roosevelt-Chaves county line, which is some two miles east of Kenna. The stretch of road which will be made is some fifty-three miles in length and will be constructed from this county's funds, which were derived from the state highway bond issue. The construction of the road will make easy passage over the three miles of sand near the Dave Howell ranch, which has heretofore brooked all efforts at road building with the meager funds in hand. The building of the new bridge over the Pecos near Acme has added an impetus to the desire of the county road to open up an ideal wagon and automobile highway to the Roosevelt county line beyond Kenna. —Roswell Evening News.

ALL SHE HAD TO DO

By KEITH KENYON.

It just happened that day that everything had been going to the everlasting bows, as Hampden himself expressed it through his clenched teeth. The New York wires were delayed on account of the storm and even on the local line it was almost impossible to get a clear, connected message through.

"Central!" he called. "Central! What's the matter with this wire, anyhow? I've been hanging on to the end of the line for an hour trying to get a number."

"Wires down below Grand Indian," she answered pleasantly. "Kingston does not respond."

Hampden muttered something which sent both places hurtling merrily after Bodom and Gomorrah's fate, and called again.

"Look here, I've got to catch New York tonight before six. It's more than my luck that hangs on it. There's a fellow down there who may commit suicide tonight if he doesn't get my word that things are all right, see? I got a letter—hello, hello! Don't cut me off, please—"

"I'm listening," said Central. "He thinks he was ruined in a plunge of stock this morning, and I've got over half of his cash safe, see? Pulled it out with my own on yesterday's sales. My wife's sick up here, and I had to come. He thinks I got cold feet and ran away. Now, we've got to get word to him at once that he's all right. You and I have got to put this through or there's going to be one dead boy down there by morning. Take a message, can you, and get it through by telegraph anywhere along the line?"

"Hold the wire. I'll see," said Central.

Hampden held it, frowning out at the trees, crystal white with ice and snow.

"Hello, just a minute, please," she called back. "I think we can get it through by way of Newburgh. Newburgh seems to respond."

Newburgh did respond. The wires that way were all up. When the connection was made, his voice sounded husky to him as he got the office and asked for Ted.

"Why, he's just left, sir," the boy at the switch answered. "Maybe I can catch him in the hall." There was a pause and something seemed to break before Hampden's eyes like a great noiseless skyrocket. His brain grew numb except for the pain through his shoulder and he slipped limply to the floor.

Back in New York, Ted turned moodily from the elevators and followed the boy to the phone booth. His head throbbed with pain. He hated New York, Hampden, fate, everything. All he wanted was to get out of it. Then the girl at the end of the wire held him. Her voice was beautiful, sweet, cheery, most of all full of human interest.

"Hello, is this Mr. Curtis? This is Central at Grand Indian. Long distance reports Mr. Hampden who was calling you fails to respond. I have his message. Ready?"

"Ready," answered Ted eagerly.

"His wife is sick. That is why he was called here suddenly. Wishes me to state that he took your money out of the market yesterday with his own with profit on sales. Over half safe. Come to Grand Indian, New York, at once. Signed, Hampden."

When the night train pulled into Grand Indian, a tall figure in a stormy ulster swung off and into the little station. He made straight for the desk, but the ticket agent said the telegraph room was upstairs.

"She lives there," he added. "Miss Hewitt. Just knock on the door. She's up till twelve."

Ted took the narrow stairs in three steps and rapped on the door quickly. He had made up all sorts of speeches on the way to this girl who had given him the word of good cheer, but when the door opened and he saw her standing there, all he could do was to reach out his hand and say:

"I'm Curtis, Ted Curtis. I wanted to thank you for hauling me up here. How's Mr. Hampden?"

"Better," she smiled up at him in the friendliest way. Her white sweater was buttoned close to her chin, and her hair was rumpled as if she had been sleeping, but her eyes were bright and happy as she looked at him, "sizing him up," as Ted himself would have expressed it. "He must have had some sort of a shock following nervous strain, the doctor said. They haven't told his wife yet. They're both coming out of it all right. I called up twice after you left New York to make sure. You see, he had already given his message when he fell, so all I had to do was push it through and get you. Only I did put in for you to come at once."

All she had to do. Ted simply stared at her. Did she know just what a fool he had been, just the sort of a quitter it was that wrote the letter up to Hampden, just how it had been her call at the end of the wire that had pulled him back to sanity and love of life, the realization that up there in the mountains somewhere there was a girl with a voice like that who could make New York look like thirty cents in the big reckoning.

"I'm going right up to the house now," he said. "I'll get the station back to pull me through somehow, but I'm coming back to see you."

War No Peril to Prosperity.

"International difficulties will not materially harm the prosperous condition in this region," says J. F. Downs, president of the New England National Bank, in an interview in the Kenna City Star. "If relations are broken off with Germany there will be no immediate effect upon commercial lines in this part of the country." It will mean simply that the nation will prepare for eventualities. In the meantime prosperity will continue.

Continuing, Mr. Downs said: "In all the thirty-four years I have lived in Kansas City the business prospects never were so bright. We are prosperous now, but all signs point to much greater prosperity."

"On top of two years of great crops we will have piling in on us within sixty days, so experts say, a 135 million bushel wheat crop. And last year's crop still is being marketed. It is a condition without precedent for this region."

"On top of that, the grass is fine, the stock came through the winter in fine shape and they have plenty to feed on. Oil in great quantities is being marketed at high prices. All lines of business are in a sound financial condition."

"High prices are being commanded for all commodities. It means continued prosperity."

Prosperity, wages, commerce, industrial expansion, international law—all are aboard the Democratic band wagon, which bears the label—"America first, last and always." Seating capacity is ample for Republicans.

In 20 months of the new Democratic tariff, ending March 31, 1916, the balance of trade in favor of the United States in its world commerce exceeds $2,936,000,000, as compared with less than half that, or $1,402,000,000 during the last 20 months of the Republican tariff. Who wants to abolish this career of prosperity by a return to old conditions?
